Dr. Jill Ryan is a Senior Scientist in Cochrane South Africa at the South African Medical Research Council. She holds a Bachelors in Psychology, with her postgraduate education (Masters/PhD) completed through the Child and Family Studies Programme, all based at the University of the Western Cape. Her research interest includes family well-being and intervention research. Currently she is working on a project which supports the successful development of evidence-based health policy briefs for decision makers, in countries of the African Region of the World Health Organization, to guide actions towards attainment of universal health coverage in the context of the Sustainable Development Goals. Dr. Ryan is also involved in other projects which include barriers to vaccine uptake and vaccine hesitancy.
